

DEFENDING JOBS AND WAGES!

Wildcat strikes by ordinary British workers, who fear losing their jobs to cheap foreign labour, should be applauded rather than condemned.

The problem of migrant labour or, in the latest cases foreign contractors, has been ignored by the Government and the establishment Trade Unions for too long. British workers have lost job opportunities (nine out of ten of the 3 million new jobs created since 1997 have gone to foreign workers) and seen wages capped or undercut.

The recent enlargement of the EU resulted in large numbers of migrants from Eastern Europe as all member citizens have the right of unhindered access. Unlike other countries we didn't seek to control that flow. In times of labour shortages one could be charitable but we face a recession. The problem must be quickly addressed.

As National Liberals we are concerned about the welfare of our people. Apart from family and community our loyalty is to our nation's citizens. This is why we wish to protect the jobs and living standards of our workers all of all races, something most other countries do automatically.

LISTENING TO THE PEOPLE

The suggestion by Labour's Lord Mandelson that British workers should consider going overseas for work was an insult. It was reminiscent of the 'Get on your bike and look for work' comment of Tebbit during the last period of high unemployment. The attacks on the strikers and support for the EU 'internal market' by the Liberal Democrats, highlights their 'globalist' rather than 'national' position. Instead of criticising workers politicians must start listening to the people.

As National Liberals we believe the Government should seek to correct the EU labour laws and ensure companies trading in Britain advertise jobs and contracts within the UK. Nothing less will now do.
